Ken Keller is a founder and trial partner with Krieg, Keller, Sloan, Reilley & Roman LLP. Currently, Ken's practice is primarily complex commercial litigation and white collar criminal defense, with an emphasis on intellectual property disputes. Over the years, he has represented companies in the biotechnology, semiconductor, pharmaceutical, automotive, fresh produce, and fashion industries. He has tried more than 65 cases of all types to verdict in the federal and state courts throughout the United States. As a result, he was elected to the American Board of Trial Advocates.

Ken's experience in intellectual property matters includes jury trials in patents, trademarks, trade dress, and copyrights in cases representing both inventors and alleged infringers. He has been involved in matters dealing with such diverse technologies as semiconductor chip design, programmable logic devices, DRAM technology, chemical and biotechnology processes (including protein synthesis and DNA purification), hybrid pineapples, fashion footwear design, automotive design, machine technology and medical/dental devices. He has prepared and/or tried cases in the federal courts in California, Nevada, Oregon, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Texas and Florida. He also has extensive experience litigating and counseling clients on issues related to antitrust and anticompetitive conduct, and alleged unfair business practices under federal and state statutes in connection with a variety of products and markets, and protection of trade secrets.
